CAPTAIN THOMAS COOK commanded the Independent Company, Light Horse, North Carolina Continental Line, during the War of the Revolution.

All the papers relating to his application for a pension (which was granted) are of record in the Bureau of Pensions, Washington, D. C. In all, he submitted three separate statements of his services. As these three statements are substantially the same, I have selected the most complete one, noting any important variations or additions that appear in the other statements.

Thomas Cook was born in Hanover County, Virginia, May 15, 1752, died in Henry County, Georgia, March, 1841, and is buried in the old Cook graveyard, eight miles from McDonough, Henry County, Georgia, on the line of the Atlanta and Covington Railroad.

My descent from Captain Cook is as follows:

WILLIAM M. SWEENY.

ASTORIA, LONG ISLAND, April 19, 1909.

GEORGIA, HENRY COUNTY:

Personally appeared before me the undersigned, a Justice of the Peace, Thomas Cook, who, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith, that by reason of old age and the consequent loss of memory he cannot swear positively and exactly as to the precise time of his service, but, according to the best of his recollection, he served not less than the period below and in the following grades:

On July the tenth, Seventeen hundred and seventy-six (1776), I entered the service as a private soldier in Captain John Leek's company (Guilford Militia), Colonel James Martin's regiment, Griffith Rutherford, General; marched to the Cherokee Nation to suppress the Indians; burnt their town, killed and destroyed as many of the Indians as we could get hold of; remained in the nation as long as we could get provisions, and was compelled to return back again. On the 25th of November landed at our starting point, being out four months and fifteen days—4 months and $\frac{1}{2}$. This was known as the "Cherokee Expedition." This service was in an embodied corps, called out by competent authority by the State of North Carolina.

On the 1st of September, Seventeen hundred and seventy-seven (1777), I was elected First Lieutenant of a company of Martin's regiment, company commanded as before by John Leek, and attached to the said brigade commanded by the same General (Griffith Rutherford). The intention of this service was to scout the country throughout, for the Tories were very mischievous, indeed, in the lower part of the State alongside the seaboard. We were raised as the protectors of our State; McCloud was the Tory General who headed the Tories in the Scotch settlements, as aforesaid. In this service I was out three months, when we returned back to our county and homes. This was known in that day as the "Scotch Expedition."

About Christmas or the 1st of January (1778), we were ordered out as before, to the lower parts of the State, to hunt for the same Tory commander (McCloud), for the Tories, as soon as we had left their particular section, commenced their mischief. Some time in the winter we came upon McCloud in the Scotch settlements at a bridge (name of the bridge not recollected), but near a swamp called "Drowning Swamp," where we had a fight and killed several of the Tories and caused McCloud to flee with the balance. Colonel Paisley commanded our regiment at this time—Colonel Martin, with some of the men, remaining in the upper part of the State. We consumed the whole of this year as we did the latter part of the former, backward and forward continually. This was likewise known as the "Scotch Expedition"—making in the whole in this kind of service fifteen (15) months. I was commissioned by Governor Caswell.

Early in January, Seventy-nine (1779), I was elected Captain of a company in Colonel Martin's regiment composed of Guilford Militia, and was commissioned by Governor Caswell of North Carolina. Joined the regiment at Guilford Court House; marched immediately for South Carolina, General Rutherford still commanding. Went through South Carolina directly to the Savannah River; joined General Lincoln at a place called the "Smoking Camp," about seventy miles below Augusta. From the "Smoking Camp" marched up the river to a place known as the "Sisters Ferry." From the latter place a detachment was sent over under General Ashe into Georgia, where they had a fight with the British and got defeated. This is known as the "Brier Creek Battle," or "Ashe's Defeat." During this expedition I remained with the army under General Lincoln, and was upon guard at the time and could hear the guns. Immediately after the above fight, General Lincoln and General Moultrie marched the main army up the river to a place called "Turkey Hill," opposite to the place where the British main army were encamped on the Georgia side of said river. We remained at said hill three weeks in full sight of the British army. In this time we frequently had intercourse by conversation with the British. We marched from this latter place under our aforesaid Generals, still higher up the river to a place called "Black Swamp." The day before we left "Turkey Hill," General Lincoln had a road cut from the hill directly into the country for about six miles. This was done in sight of the British army, and, as I thought, was done for a feint, but I now know the intention of our Generals in cutting said road, for the day they quit the road we directly marched up the river to "Black Swamp." Staid a few days. General Lincoln took the whole body of the regulars from the main army and marched for Stono. The balance of the army, consisting of North and South Carolina militia, was left under the care of General Moultrie at "Black Swamp," at which place I remained until the relief came from North Carolina, which was about the first of June in said year. This was a six months' expedition with no particular designation but that of "The United States Expedition against the British." At this time I received a written discharge from General Moultrie to march my company home, and in our proper county to be discharged. During our travel we had, from the hand of our General, orders to draw provisions for my company at the various commissaries as we passed on. This brought about the middle of June, 1779.

After our return home we were instructed by our General to hold ourselves in readiness to meet any emergency that might arise.

From June, 1779, until the first of September, 1780, I was not in any embodied corps doing service, but was frequently called out by our Colonel, who at this time was Paisley, to suppress large bodies of Tories. During this interval of time it is impossible to relate fully the kind of service performed, for it was of a very unsettled nature. We did not remain at home at any one time longer than about two weeks before we would receive orders to scout the country and restore peace and quiet for a while.

In September, 1780 (Seventeen hundred and eighty), I was ordered to raise a Horse Company consisting of about 30 (thirty), or as many as I might think necessary for the occasion—known as "Rangers." I marched out and met Davie and Brisbane in Mecklenburg County, North Carolina. From this county we marched in a body to and joined General Davidson on the Catawba River, where we remained scouting the country and harassing the British until Davidson was killed. He was killed by the fire of a cannon across the river from the British side and by the British. After the death of Davidson we dispersed and fled over the Yadkin. We were in a very distracted state after the death of our General, until Greene came to take charge of us. All this service was confined to the State of North Carolina. As General Greene passed through our State with his regulars for the South, we were required to join him and march with him to the South until he could or should intercept Cornwallis. We marched from Guilford towards Camden in South Carolina, where we supposed the British to be. We met him about the Catawba, and General Greene's forces being too feeble, he retreated before him into Virginia. Now I received orders from General Greene to go back to my State and county to raise more men and meet him as speedily as I could, which I did, and met him at the High Rock Ford on Haw River and continued with him marching and counter-marching through the country, until we met the British at Guilford. In the battle of Guilford I bore a part under General Greene, but our forces being too weak, we were forced to flee and give the ground. The British did not follow us one yard—just took our cannon and fired it upon us. I rode off with Greene from the battle-ground. According to our agreement (if it should be necessary to give them the ground), we were to flee to the Iron Works—7 miles—which we did. The second day, including the battle-day, Cornwallis sent to the General to come and bury his dead, which he did. From Guilford Court House we pursued Cornwallis to Ramsey Mills, on Deep River, where we came in sight of them, but the river being high and rising, General Greene considered it not safe to undertake to cross, for the British were on the opposite bank. I think the British used about two thousand rails in the formation of a floating raft to pass over upon, and after they had passed over destroyed, as much as was in their power, the means they had used in crossing. General Greene considered it safest and best for our common country to retrace his steps and push for the Eutaw Springs. Upon our arrival near the place, we discovered the British. We halted and prepared for battle. I think this battle was in September, 1781, but will not say certainly. General Greene gave Lord Rawdon a fight and compelled him to retreat with his British subjects and flee the country. During this battle I and my company and several others were reserved by orders of the commander-in-chief to cover his retreat, should he deem it necessary for the safety of his country to make one. From the above place I was sent back with my company and several more to our proper county and State to protect it and defend it and our women and children from the plunderings of the Tories and British; for they were scattered over the whole country, and distress and dismay covered our whole land. I was, by General Greene, ordered not to disband my company upon our return home, but to be ever vigilant and scout the whole upper country of our State until he should require our assistance, and if he should, we would be immediately informed of it and ordered to march. I did as ordered, until I received instructions from Headquarters that peace was made and there was no more use for us. Upon which news I was discharged from the service and ordered to discharge my company; I did so, which ended my labors. I think it was in the Spring of (1783) that we were discharged as above stated.

In this declaration, amendatory of my former, I have endeavored to be as particular and definite in relation to my service as was in my power. I know one thing, that, if I cannot satisfy the War Department of my service, my country is enjoying the fruits of my labor for six years spent in her service.

In all of the above service, I was called upon regularly and legally by my country, and for the periods above mentioned. I was in the field as a regular embodied militia soldier as above stated. As I have formerly stated, I was not, during the above periods of time, engaged in any civil or other lucrative employment or pursuit. There is some difference in respect to duties in this declaration and the former, but I believe the latter to be as near right as my memory can serve. It is impossible for me to be strictly correct in the relating the whole of the events and occurrences which took place during the war. I am a poor old man and desire the assistance of my country now that she is willing to pay me for my service rendered to her fifty years ago, but if I cannot do all the War Department requires me to do, I have made the best statement in my power, and if this will not suffice, my case must suffer. The Searcher of all hearts knows that what I have said is true, and far be it for me, in the very smallest degree, to endeavor to practice a deception upon my country.

I have looked at the requests contained in the letter from the Department and have endeavored, as far as my memory and the notable events would enable me, to give a satisfactory account of my service.

- Y In that I served as a private soldier
- o 4 months 15 days in 1776
- o 3 months as 1st Lieutenant 1777
- o 12 months as 1st Lieutenant 1778
- 4 as Captain, 1st Jan. 1779-80-81-82-83.

I know the circumstances, occurrences and events as above detailed to be true, but there may be error as to the dates. I have proved my service by the respectable witnesses, both of whom served under me, one for 2 years, the other 4. To Mr. Theodosius Cook and the Rev. Henry Hardin, the latter of whom is now receiving his pay for the very service performed while a soldier under me.

EXTRACTS FROM FIRST DECLARATION OF THOMAS COOK.

States that he joined the main army under General Rutherford in Rowan County, North Carolina, and marched to the Cherokee Nation, where they burnt and destroyed seventeen towns and villages and as many Indians as they could get hold of.

Says the commission of Captain issued to him by Governor Caswell of North Carolina, "I have long since lost, taking no care at all of it, for I never expected to receive any pay for that I had at this late day. Time has nearly worn me away, but, thank God, my mind continues vigorous and sound."

Refers to the following as witnesses to his service in the Revolutionary War:

CHARLES GALES, of Walton County, Georgia.

THEODOSIUS COOK, of Pike County, Georgia.

"References in county in which I live—Tand W. Key, Postmaster. Col. Oliver W. Cox, Judge Russell, Judge Spencer, Rev. James Gamble, Rev. Joshua Calloway, Rev. Benj. Wilson and the Hon. Wiley Thompson, of Elbert County."

States that he was born in "Hanover County, Virginia, May 15, 1752," and that he has a record of his birth "at home transcribed from my father's Bible."

Says he "removed from North Carolina to Wilkes now Elbert County, where I remained until 1830, when I removed to Henry County, where I now live."

EXTRACTS FROM SECOND DECLARATION OF THOMAS COOK.

In the year 1777, in September, I was elected a Lieutenant of a company in Martin's regiment attached to the same brigade as before and in this year I served three months in actual service in the lower part of the State of North Carolina in pursuit of the Tory commander, McCloud, who was protected and supported by what was then called the "Highland Scotch Tories." All the aforementioned service was by lawful and competent authority of the State of North Carolina. This last expedition was known by the name of the "Scotch Expedition." Out three months. Colonel John Paisley was our Colonel in this affair.

In the Fall or 1st September (1780), I was ordered to raise a company of horsemen for three months, commanded by Davie and Brisbane. The main object of this expedition was to keep the British in check until the northern army came,—Gates having been defeated. Marched to the Catawba River—Davidson was killed. In this tour I was out three months in actual service. I joined General Greene on his retreat from Cornwallis and went into Virginia, and as soon as General Greene thought himself strong enough for Cornwallis, we marched back into North Carolina to Hills Boro. From there we went to Guilford Court House.
